Initial Jurisdiction Review

The court conducts a jurisdiction review on each case filed. If, in a diversity case, the plaintiff fails to specify the citizenship of each party or to plead the jurisdictional amount in controversy, the court will typically issue an order to show cause why the case should not be dismissed (or remanded) for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The court expects the parties to raise jurisdictional objections as soon as possible.